15. Read the following passage and answer the questions set on it. 25

Arun had always been a creature of habit. Every morning, he woke up at precisely six o'clock, went for a brisk walk in the park near his house, and returned home to have a cup of tea while reading the newspaper. His life was simple, predictable, and, in his opinion, perfectly balanced. But one rainy morning, everything changed.

That day, as he stepped out for his usual walk, dark clouds loomed overhead. He considered turning back, but something urged him to continue. The park, usually bustling with morning joggers, was deserted. As he walked along the path, enjoying the fresh scent of rain-soaked earth, he noticed a small, crumpled piece of paper lying near a bench. It was unusual for the park to be littered, so he picked it up, intending to throw it in the dustbin. But as he unfolded it, his curiosity got the better of him.

The paper contained a hastily written note : "Meet me at the old bookstore at 10 a.m. Urgent."

Arun frowned. He wasn't one to involve himself in other people's affairs, but something about the note intrigued him. Who had written it ? And for whom ? He knew the old bookstore — it was a quiet place tucked away in a narrow lane, a place he hadn't visited in years. On an impulse, he decided to go.

At exactly ten o'clock, he reached the bookstore. It was dimly lit, filled with the scent of old books and wooden shelves that had aged gracefully. Arun looked around, feeling slightly foolish. He had no idea what he was expecting. Just as he was about to leave, a voice stopped him

"You found my note."

Arun turned to see an elderly man, his face lined with wrinkles, eyes sharp and intelligent. "I — uh, I found it in the park," Arun admitted.

The man smiled. "I had almost lost hope. I left that note for my grandson, hoping he would find it. But perhaps it was meant for you instead."

Arun was puzzled. "What do you mean?"

The old man sighed. "My grandson and I used to visit this bookstore often. He loved books, but as he grew older, he lost interest. I wanted to remind him of this place, of the joy he once found here. But maybe you were meant to remember something too."

Arun felt a strange sense of nostalgia wash over him. As a child, he had loved books, but in the routine of adult life, he had forgotten that passion. He looked around once more, this time with fresh eyes. Perhaps the note had indeed been meant for him.

That day, Arun left the bookstore with a book in his hands and a realization in his heart — sometimes, the most unexpected journeys bring us back to what we truly love.

In today's fast-paced world, mental health is as important as physical health, yet it is often overlooked. Many people experience stress, anxiety, and depression due to work pressure, academic demands, or personal struggles. Unfortunately, mental health issues are often ignored or misunderstood, leading to serious consequences.

A healthy mind is essential for overall well-being. When people are mentally strong, they can handle challenges effectively, maintain good relationships, and perform well in their daily activities. However, constant stress and negative emotions can lead to mental exhaustion, affecting productivity and quality of life. To prevent this, it is crucial to develop healthy habits such as regular exercise, meditation, and proper sleep. Talking to friends, family members, or professionals can also provide much-needed emotional support.

Despite growing awareness, there is still a stigma around mental health issues. Many people hesitate to seek help due to fear of judgment. Schools, workplaces, and communities must promote mental well-being by encouraging open discussions and offering professional support when needed.

Taking care of mental health should be a priority for everyone. Just as people visit doctors for physical ailments, they should not hesitate to seek help for emotional struggles. A healthy mind leads to a healthier, happier life.
